

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE

BlueWare Granted SOA Connect Validation

Cadillac, Michigan—July 10, 2007 – BlueWare, Inc. has been granted SOA Connect validation by IBM. In order to obtain Service Oriented Architecture (SOA) validation, BlueWare had to be able to meet a specific set of criteria and demonstrate that criteria for IBM. Based on those results, the IBM Innovation Center concurred that the technical and business information provided by BlueWare constitutes Connect Level Certification.

BlueWare's Lead Architect, Jyran Glucky, comments on the importance of this validation, "Service Oriented Architecture has given us a better way of defining our business requirements by reducing our time to market and offering component re-use, which in turn lowers our development costs and increases our ROI."

SOA Benefits

Service Oriented Architecture (SOA) is an IT architectural style that simplifies the integration between business systems and components. By using SOA compliant components, BlueWare can increase innovation by reusing the existing functionality of the systems rather than having to rebuild them when business requirements change. SOA helps bridge the gap between the business side and the IT side of a business and as a result, offers greater flexibility and quicker time to market. Using SOA components also allows the ability to better comply with government regulations including that of HIPAA.
